Just in Time. Going to the rescue, a lifeboat sometimes has to beat to windward in the teeth of a terrific gale. Hours may be taken in reaching the wreck, the lifeboat perhaps being but just in time to find one mast only above water, with but a remnant of the crew left, and they nearly exhausted. Each lifeboat has a supply of restoratives on board, which are brought into use on the journey back to shore, and men are frequently thus nursed back to life.
